

can natural growth be constructed? / are our surroundings creative by themselves?

about valentin

valentin loellmann was born (1983) and raised in southern germany. together with his four siblings, he grew up in an environment of shared creativity. as a child, a strong sensibility regarding his surroundings and details laid the foundations to his creative spirit and ambition. he has carried these influences on through his personal growth. they kept motivating his work in different aspects and along different states of mind. an experience, a mood or a feeling in relation with his direct surroundings can be the impulse to create.

about the studio

In 2010, right after graduating from the academy of fine arts in maastricht (NL), valentin started to create unique furniture pieces and he quickly built up his atelier in an old hat factory in the center of maastricht. After making the building his own, it now crystallizes his thoughts, inspirations and emotions, to an extent that it feels home.

in 2015 studiovalentinloellmann was founded and next to the creation of furniture pieces and objects, it also focuses on indoor and outdoor spaces, extensions and atmospheres.

loellmann creates pieces not for the piece itself, but for the creative process experienced which feeds his inspiration and influences the next piece. each piece is formed by hand and therefore there are no prototypes and no such thing as a 'good' or 'bad' piece, each influences the next. they all have a part to play, and such is their value. he says: "my work is mostly influenced and guided by my larger vision of things that go far beyond furniture pieces. it's not about making a perfect furniture or design piece. the piece is always just a carrier of a moment or a tool to get to the next. it's about the process and the process is the work."

his work has been shown at Art Basel, Collective Design Fair (New York), and PAD Paris/London. he was awarded PAD London's best contemporary design piece in 2013 and 2017. in addition to crafting his signature design pieces, loellmann also works on interior design commissions for private collectors.

"it's entirely natural for me to build something out of nothing. I never sketch. early on in my life I learned how to capture certain situations and moments, a specific atmosphere or feeling in my thoughts, detail it further in my mind by putting myself right into it. watching rooms and spaces filled with people and imaging the different interactions amongst the environment and humans living within." – valentin loellmann moving his vision to the next level, in 2019 loellmann acquired a large gas factory c. 1900 with 5000m2 of grounds in the centre of maastricht, to be transformed into his very own perspective of space and energy -- which he believes is a medium that needs further exploration as a new art form, and will be most valuable in the future.

"it's about energy. and energy has to flow. and an art form that you can't buy it or put it into an architectural plan. you can just feel and let it do its thing with however your own sense reacts to it. then we can have something like magic".

the factory itself will become a future public foundation.

valentin loellmann can never put his mind to rest. he is constantly reaching out for new challenges and every step he takes has a lasting effect on his capabilities and future work.

he can not stop to search and research, to try, reflect and try again.

why?

that “why” might be the purpose of his journey.
